EDITORIAL NOTE

We are delighted and privileged to present to you this first issue of the Magazine entitled “COVID19-A tale of a pandemic”, published and circulated by Hariharpur Friends of Environment, which aims to stimulate and support for the disseminate academic, and professional research work in the field of Environmental Science. This issue contributes to that aim by bringing you various sources of information and initiatives related to the field. It focuses on the theme of the COVID 19 with cumulative academic writings from all sources.

The past year we had survived a situation which we never faced before. It was in our book and heard from our grandparents about the so-called Pandemic. The human-kind again stood in front of new circumstances which brought horror, tension, and deaths. We realized that our mother environment can be so harsh which we even can't think of it. All levels of socio-political stockholders nationally and internationally became puzzled to handle this pandemic. As of now the situation we don't consider it a better reason why as per scientists and experts still we are in the second wave of the COVID19 pandemic. It is necessary to understand the demand of the reality and we should maintain all the orders of our government bodies to safeguard our future generations.

As a final note, We would like to take the opportunity, on behalf of The Hariharpur Friends of Environment, to sincerely thank all the authors for their invaluable contribution to the Magazine. We wish them all the best in their future activities, and we wish you all a fruitful healthy and safe year ahead.
